Leaf® personal light

Soothing mood and conscience, Leaf transcends the lighting category into a state of, dare we say, enlightenment. Designed by Yves Béhar, Leaf has a simple touch control that allows an easy change from warm to cool light. And Leaf is kind to the conscience: Minimal materials combined with LED efficiency make Leaf as sustainable as it is illuminating.

Individual control. Leaf puts control in people's hands, or more accurately, their fingertips. Sliding a finger along a groove in the light's base adjusts intensity or changes light from warm to cool. The individual can position Leaf for task lighting, fold it for subtle ambient light, or straighten the arms for dramatic wall lighting.

Turning on the technology. Leaf addresses one aspect of LED lights that has limited their use—the intense heat they produce. Leaf handles this issue with a proprietary, continuous heat-dissipation system. The result is a light you can touch anywhere.

Kind to the environment. Developed using Herman Miller's Design for the Environment protocol, Leaf uses less of the world's resources to give better light. It consumes 8 to 9 watts of power, about 40 percent less than compact fluorescent lights, and it sheds full light for a minimum of 60,000 hours.
